

YEAR 12 LEAVERS

2021

PRINCIPAL'S FAREWELL

Dear Students, Parents, Caregivers and SIDE Community Members

Welcome to the 2021 SIDE Year 12 Leavers' Book.

As I reflect on the achievements of our Year 12 cohort, I would like to acknowledge the Noongar Wadjuk land I am standing on and the Aboriginal country you are connected to as you read this. I pay my respects to the Aboriginal Elders and their country. We are indeed privileged to be relatively safe across Western Australia and fortunate that our Aboriginal Elders have taken such good care of country.

How quickly does a year pass? It seems only yesterday that I farewelled the 2020 Leavers and here I am, a year later, farewelling the second group of Year 12 students I have seen complete their secondary education at SIDE.

The Class of 2021 has completed their senior secondary years during difficult times due to the COVID pandemic. It has been heartening to see so many of our students doing so well, remaining focused, continuing with their studies, and achieving their best academic results. The successful completion of secondary schooling provides students with the agility, capabilities, and work ethic to successfully face whatever curve balls our world may throw at them.

Congratulations to all the Year 12 students on successfully completing Year 12, especially those among you who have achieved Awards. Special congratulations to Jack Choate, the Academic Dux, and Ashé Hazell, the Vocational Dux. One of my great pleasures at the end of the year is to select an artwork for the Principal's Art Award. This year I selected works by two students, Amira Sinclair-Hill and Sienna Berry who studied Year 12 Visual Arts at SIDE and who attend two of our partner schools in the South West. The artworks will be proudly displayed at our school.

The Leavers' Book is a snapshot of this educational moment for the Class of 2021. It showcases the diversity of students who attend SIDE, their reflections on their education, and their ambitions for the future. My thanks to the team of SIDE staff who have worked together to coordinate and produce the Year 12 Leavers' Book.

I trust that you will enjoy reflecting on some of the highlights of the 2021 SIDE year, the final year of formal secondary schooling for this group, completed in the face of vaccinations and uncertainty around borders and travel. Congratulations Class of 2021. I thank you for entrusting SIDE with your education and wish you a healthy, safe and enjoyable next step beyond secondary schooling.

I wish the Class of 2021 all the very best.

Paul Mathews

LIVING MANTLE BY AMARA SINCLAIR-HILL

To mantle something is to cloak and/or envelop it. It can also allude to a role that is assumed. As humans in the twenty first century, we have inherited the Earth as our mantle. It is our responsibility to care for it.

Our relationship to Nature's mantle is varied and evolving. In this painting, I have represented it as a dynamic symbiosis on the left panel, moving through a cloak of farmland in the centre contrasted with a more parasitic connection on the right.

I have explored loose allusions to the passage of time (looking forward to the future, living in and staring the present in the face) and eventual mortality

The most important artistic influence in this piece is the work of Gustav Klimt, particularly his integration of detailed patterns into symbolic portraiture. Another visual influence was the toxic jungle in Hayao Miyazaki's film Nausicaa of the valley of the wind, a narrative centring around the human relationship with nature, it is almost dystopian in its representation of an extremely polluted world.

I used Google Earth to craft the network of roots in the left panel based upon the network of rivers and roads in the area within which I spent my childhood - my own personal roots.

As a young person who has grown up in the forests that my parents campaigned to save, I have a great appreciation for the natural world. The looming global threat of climate change and urbanisation intertwine with my personal plans to move to the city soon to begin my adult life. These transitions make me worried about my own personal connection to nature - and for humanity as a whole.

LEGACIES BY SIENNA BERRY

As a contemporary youth, I have experienced great uncertainty regarding the future. A particular focus of my anxieties is environmental degradation and the current trajectory of fauna and flora extinctions. For Legacies I sought to encapsulate an ecocritical point of view on pollution and non-renewability. The ocean is often viewed as the origin of life, and if humanity continues to pursue unsustainability it may well become devoid of it, with only the permanent remnants of our presence remaining.

Ideas were explored in the form of thumbnail sketches. I identified overfishing, plastic pollution and fossil fuels as my issues of focus. My three subjects were children of whom I have a close relationship with: my neighbour, friend, and brother. My selected medium was acrylic paint on canvas as the fast-drying aspect and blendability was desirable. The style of portraiture is realism, and my technique was highly influenced by Baroque artists and Josh Keyes, as shown through the high tonal contrast and saturated primary colours. Similar themes of isolation and dystopia are also explored in my piece, as influenced by Keyes.

The subjects' pained faces are presented as hierarchically significant to invoke an empathetic response. The human psyche is often incapable of visualising large statistics; thus, the significance of pollution figures is not fully realised by the public. To combat this, I drew on the intense emotions I experience when visually confronted by photographs of suffering marine animals. My intent was to invoke a similar emotional reaction in my audience, who is of an adult demographic, by substituting animals with children. The purpose of this was to urge the audience to reconsider their own practices and contemplate what they want the world to look like for future generations. Will our legacies be our children or our ecological footprints?
